Cont.

7-21-41 "Several years ago, I was a prosperous business man in Arvada. Like all other live ones, I joined the Chamber of Commerce and acted on many committees.

I didn't like the way they ran things; the president and directors were poor fish, and the program they were carrying out wasn't the right one. Dues were too high.

So I decided to leave them flat and refused to pay my assessment. I went into temporary hiding to see them fail, and to see the grass come up in the Arvada streets, I'd show 'em!

For several years I watched 'em. They got along all right without me, even faster than before.

I discovered that the Chamber of Commerce didn't depend on me, but that I depended on it and it's booster activities.

Wouldn't that make you wild:

The Ape Man."
